St. Andrews from the South. Looking across the tumbling waters of the bay, one's eyes rest first of all on the east wall of the Cathedral with its one great window between two pointed towers, then on the huge square tower (108 feet high) of St. Rule's little Church, and the tower of the College Church. Far away on the descending slopes to the east rises the Martyrs' Monument, an obelisk raised in 1813 to Wishart and his fellow victims.

St. Andrews from the South. This royal and ancient city dates back long before its first royal charter in the 12th century, for legend ascribes its foundation to the translation here of the relics of St Andrew said to have been brought here in 370 A.D., but the foundation of the ancient monastery is, with much more probability, ascribed to a Bishop of Hexham who in A.D 709, settled here as a refugee, from his own diocese then ravaged by the Danes.

Hope you have had a good time. Had a quiet time here. Weather not so much.
Hope you will write soon & tell me
all about it.
With fondest
love from
